1. Providing Exposure of Field to Study Unexplored Languages and Cultures in order to Prepare students for Future Research

Field tours are best practice for students, offering hands-on experiences that complement classroom learning and prepare the students/ scholars for future research. They spark interest, promote critical thinking, and broaden perspectives by exposing students to new environments and cultures. These tours develop research aptitude and practical skills, contributing to academic and professional growth of students.

2. Engaging Students in Weekly Tutorials to Foster Understanding and Develop Conducive Learning Environments :

Weekly Tutorials are indeed a valuable best practice for students. Tutorials provide an interactive learning environment where students actively engage with course material through discussions, problem-solving, and collaborative activities. The tutorials conducted in the department often involve practical exercises, case studies, or simulations that allow students to apply theoretical knowledge to real-world situations, reinforcing learning outcomes. Engaging in tutorials encourage peer-to-peer learning and collaboration, where students can exchange ideas, share perspectives, and learn from each other's experiences, promoting a deeper understanding of the subject matter. Regular tutorials provide a structured feedback mechanism where students can receive on going feedback on their progress, assignments, and performance, enabling them to track their learning journey effectively. The tutorials conducted in the department often include problem-solving activities or group projects that challenge students to think critically, analyse information, and develop solutions, fostering the development of essential problem-solving skills
